6) See Wilkinson, Chinese History, 78-80. Usually called Shuo wen for short, this is China's first etymological dictionary. The postface says it includes 9,353 graphs, of which 1163 are alternate forms, but present editions have 9,431 and 1279, respectively. Xu was the first to use "semantic classifiers," or "radicals" (bushou 部首) to organize words, creating a system of 540 of them. There are various editions of Shuo wen. On the text see William Boltz, "Shuo wen chieh tzu 說文解字," in Early Chinese Texts: A bibliographical guide, 429-42.

- Zhang Tingyu 張廷玉 (1672-1755) et al., comps. Pianzi leibian 駢字類編. 240 juan. Completed 1726. Printed 1728. Taipei: Xuesheng shuju, 1963.¹³⁾
- Zhang Yushu 張玉書 (1642-1711) et al., comps. Peiwen yunfu 佩文韻府. 106 juan. 1711. 6 vols. with index. Shanghai: Shangwu yinshuguan, 1937.¹⁴⁾

3. Encyclopedic Dictionaries¹⁵⁾

- 10) See Wilkinson, Chinese History, 41.
- 11) This is a specialized dictionary for Chinese from the oracle bones through the Han.
- 12) The best way of determining what something means is to see how it is used in other occurrences. As do the better dictionaries, the works listed here demonstrate usage by providing phrases in which words occur. The following Pianzi leibian 駢字類編 and Peiwen yunfu 佩文韻府 are also useful for finding the locus classicus of an expression. These works are often grouped with leishu 類書, or encyclopedias, in Sinological guides.
- 13) Phrases are listed under thirteen categories according to the rhyme of the first character. For more information, see Wilkinson, Chinese History, 81; Teng Ssu-yü and Knight Biggerstaff, comps., An Annotated Bibliography of Selected Chinese Reference Works (Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1971), 98-99; Pan Shuguang 潘樹廣, Gudian wenxue wenxian ji qi jiansuo 古典文學文獻及其檢索 (Xi'an: Shanxi Renmin chubanshe, 1984), 412-14. For indexes, see Zhuang Weisi 莊爲思 (Wallace S. Johnson, Jr.), Pianzi leibian yinde 駢字類編引得 (Taipei: Siku shuju, 1966); He Guanyi 何冠義, Pianzi leibian suoyin 駢字類編索引 (Beijing: Zhongguo shudian, 1984); Cheng Qianfan 程千帆 and Tao Yun 陶芸, ed. Pianzi leibian yin xu suoyin 駢字類編音序索引 (Wuhan: Wuhan chubanshe, 1995).
- 14) This redaction includes Yunfu shiyi 韻府拾遺 (in volume 6), which was begun in 1716 and completed in 1720. There are other editions of the Peiwen yunfu, but this one has the virtue of having an index. Each page contains four and a half pages of the original. Peiwen yunfu is named for the Peiwen zhai 佩文齋, the library of the Kangxi 康熙 Emperor (r. 1662-1722), who ordered its compilation in 1704. It was based on two earlier, but less comprehensive works: Yin Shifu's 陰時夫 (ca. 1279) Yunfu qunyu 韻府群玉 in 20 juan and Ling Zhilong's 陵稚隆 (fl. ca. 1580-90) Wuche yunrui 五車韻瑞 in 160 juan. For more information see Wilkinson, Chinese History, 81; Teng and Biggerstaff, An Annotated Bibliography of Selected Chinese Reference Works, 97-98; Pan, Gudian wenxue wenxian ji qi jiansuo, 411-12.
- 15) The importance of the two dictionaries (Zongwen da cidian and Dai Kan-Wa jiten) for serious research, particularly in pre-modern Chinese language, literature, and culture, cannot be

- Chang Qiyun 張其昀 et al., comps. Zongwen da cidian 中文大辭典. 40 vols. Taipei: Zhongguo wenhua yanjiusuo, 1962–68.¹⁶⁾
- Luo Zhufeng 羅竹風 et al., comps. Hanyu da cidian 漢語大詞典. 13 vols. Shanghai: Hanyu da cidian chubanshe, 1986–94.¹⁷⁾
- Morohashi Tetsuji 諸橋轍次. Dai Kan-Wa jiten 大漢和辭典. 13 vols. Tokyo: Taishukan shoten, 1955–60.¹⁸⁾

4. General Chinese–Chinese Dictionaries¹⁹⁾

1) Dictionaries of Classical Chinese

- Ci yuan* 辭源. 1915. 4 vols. rev. ed. Beijing: Shangwu yinshuguan, 1979–1983; rev. ed. Beijing: Shangwu yinshuguan, 2009; rpt. ed. Taipei: Yuanliu chuban shiye youxian gongsi, 1988.²⁰⁾
- Gu Hanyu chang yong zi zidian* 古漢語常用字字典. Beijing: Shangwu yinshu guan, 197 overstated. They are the first place to turn for answers to many kinds of questions.

- 16) What amounts to a Chinese version of the first edition (1955–60) of Dai Kan-Wa jiten was produced in Taipei. This dictionary is no match for the Hanyu da cidian or the Dai Kan-Wa jiten. See Wilkinson, Chinese History, 91. See also Teng and Biggerstaff, An Annotated Bibliography of Selected Chinese Reference Works, 133; Zheng, Zhongwen cankao ziliao, 128–30; Wolff and Corcoran, Chinese Studies, 41; Pan, Gudian wenxue wenxian ji qi jiansuo, 283.
- 17) This work seeks to not only define the language of today but also to record standard usage in most periods and in most styles and to illustrate the changing use of words with citations. However, in a dictionary of the scope and size of this work that aims to cover most genres of written Chinese from the Classics of the Zhou period to the 1970s, there are bound to be some weaknesses. The corpus of text used in the compilation of this work is not listed in the dictionary and has never been published. See Wilkinson, Chinese History, 88–91.
- 18) It uses many quotations, mainly from classical Chinese. In addition there is a great deal of encyclopedic information. Despite the addition of a large number of modern words, it remains essentially a dictionary of classical and literary Chinese. See Wilkinson, Chinese History, 91. See also Teng and Biggerstaff, An Annotated Bibliography of Selected Chinese Reference Works, 133; Zheng, Zhongwen cankao ziliao, 128–30; Wolff and Corcoran, Chinese Studies, 41; Pan, Gudian wenxue wenxian ji qi jiansuo, 282.
- 19) While all of the following dictionaries are much less comprehensive in scope than the encyclopedic dictionaries just mentioned, some of them are quite extensive in their coverage and provide example of usages along with the definitions.
- 20) This was the first modern dictionary of compounds and phrases in classical Chinese, but is now superseded by Hanyu da cidian. See Wilkinson, Chinese History, 82, 83. The 1988 edition is a reprint of the PRC edition of the completely revised Ci yuan (1988). For a capsule history of this dictionary and the old Ciyuan on which it was based, see “Dalu ban Ci yuan zai Taiwan chuban shuoming” 大陸版辭源在臺灣出版說明 on pp. ii–iii of this edition.

22) The last and largest of such compendia to be compiled before 1912 was completed by some 40 scholars mainly from Zhejiang during the years 1797-98. It was published in 1800, and a supplement appeared in 1801. This is now completely superseded by the Guxun huizuan. 51) In addition to their value as Chinese-English dictionaries, some of Karlgren's works listed above are essentially studies of historical phonology, Grammata Serica Recensa being an important reference. This is a specialized field involving various and contested theories and systems for reconstructing earlier stages in the pronunciations of Chinese. There are very brief introductions to standard phonological sources in most of the Sinological guides. See, for instance, Teng and Biggerstaff, An Annotated Bibliography of Selected Chinese Reference Works, 146-48; Pan, Gudian wenxue wenxian ji qi jiansuo, 273-76; Wolff and Corcoran, Chinese Studies, 37-38; Zheng, Zhongwen cankao ziliao, 135-37.
